Most people use a special file manager to add, move, rename and delete files in their computer. But when you need to share files with other people without giving them access to the entire system, it can be difficult. The immo off files.zip program can help you solve this problem by creating an encrypted and password-protected file that only the person who created it can view or open. The program is compatible with Windows and Mac computers so there's no reason not to get started today! It works by creating a .zip file of any folder on your computer which has been locked for copying. The file gets a .immo file extension and the only way to unlock it is with a password that you type in when you click on it. The file can then be sent to anyone who needs to access your files. Once the user opens this zip folder, he or she will be prompted for a password and password hint if the other person forgets his or her passcode. First, you should download and install the program from its website. Then, add files to your project by clicking on the folder icon in the main screen and selecting which one you want to add. You can add several folders at once using this method. Then click on "Create ZIP" and wait for it to finish encrypting. You can then send this file in a couple of different ways: by email, in a text message to a cell phone number, or by using instant messaging programs. The password must be at least eight digits long and may use any letter instead of numbers or special characters. This program is useful because it protects your personal files from unauthorized access. When you add folders that contain sensitive information, such as pictures from your vacation or information about your family's finances, you can hash their names to make them even more secure. This makes it impossible for anyone to see what the folder contains without knowing the password. Of course, the only problem with this type of security is if it's stolen before someone else can use it... The program will be available for purchase some time soon, but you can download a free trial on the official website. It's currently compatible with Windows 2000, XP, Vista, and 7. The file has not yet been approved by Apple to run on Mac computers, but it probably will be soon.

"Every time you open a file, it will appear as normal, but those who steal it will not be able to see the contents". However, the password protected ZIP file does not need to be downloaded and installed on your computer like other programs like this one. You can email or send an SMS the password hint and the program will allow you to extract files from the protected ZIP file.
